The Blind Beggar: Daemons and Kings D.S. Lillico

Zevis'vir is never a safe place.

Kings quarrel and Daemons roam. Monsters steal babes from beds and pillow girls entice husbands to lay in them. Disease and poverty are rampant, and so too are bandits and vagabonds from all of the races. The Giants are paranoid, the Dwarves stew over a stolen son, and the Elves struggle daily in the shadow of their own King. Most of the guilds have disbanded and racism is rife. The world is so rotten that even gallant Knights are shamed.

When all in the world seems lost there is only one hope. When one's life hangs in the balance, when their moment is almost at their last, they would be wise not to waste a last breath on Gods. They look to Fate and beg her to gift them a Blind Beggar.

They come from the shadows. Blind folk that are stronger, fitter, and smarter than any others. They take no race, they pray to no Gods, and they ask for no payment. With weapons of mai'gik they come, they come and they kill all that Fate would have dead.

Except for one. Daedalus makes his own Fate. And when it is the Beggar's lives in the balance, who will come to their aid?
