Harvard Business School: A Love Story chronicles the ventures and misadventures of Jason Fox.

Wrapping up his senior year in college, this terminally hip Bostonite is hyper-sensitive about his coolness quotient, chases women for sport, and is obsessed with making money. Repeated viewings of the movie Wall Street as a Warren Buffet-wannabe in college only reinforces his belief that being in the world of capitalism only guarantees more hot women, more money and more respect.

Unfortunately for Jay's aspirations of striking it rich and retiring at an early age, his college roommates didn't include a Bill Gates or Steve Jobs. Lacking a billion dollar idea of his own, Jay sets his sights on the next best thing: business school. And not just any business school, but the self-proclaimed West Point of Capitalism: Harvard Business School. Jay, however, comes to the stark realization that two years in venture capital isn't a sure fire lock on getting into HBS.

Thus, Jay sets up a series of "life experiences" right out of the HBS application, guaranteed to dazzle even the most callous admissions directors with his renaissance approach to the world. He layers on community service in a Guatemalan orphanage with overseas ventures in Middle East and the former Soviet Union. Things don't always work out as planned, but he finds more than enough fodder for essay portion of the HBS application.
