Union Revisited (Images of America) David Alan Johnson

Union Township has changed dramatically since the 1950s. The town was still very rural in those days. OMaras Farm sold fresh fruit to local kids on their daily trek home from school; Headleys Cider Mill sold homemade cider that tasted like real apples and sausages that tasted like nothing that has ever been tasted before or since. Neighbors knew each others name and waved hello from seats on their front steps. But OMaras and Headleys are gone today, as are Woolworths, Whitneys, and Nawrockis Pharmacy. New neighbors have replaced the old. Even Union High School, once a local landmark on Caldwell Avenue, has a new home on North Third Street. Union Revisited illustrates these changes and shares Unions past, and while one can never live there again, it might be a really nice place to visit.
