The true home of the Renaissance, Florence is famous worldwide for being a treasure trove of art and culture. For the history fan, the main attractions of Florence: the Uffizi, the Palazzo Pitti and the Duomo, are among the most fabulous in the world. The city's attractions bring its history as the birthplace of the Renaissance truly to life, and the city's squares or piazzas almost seethe with the past. Visitors today can experience firsthand the wonders of both art and architecture that inspired the people of the Renaissance to attempt to recreate the civilization of ancient times.

To simply look and take in the beauty of Florentine painting and sculpture, as well as admire the elegance of its architecture, is more than enough for most, but not for the true fan of history. Florence is without doubt one of the most beautiful cities in the world, and in order to appreciate its works in their full glory, it is always best to learn who built or painted the piece in question, and, more importantly, why they did so. This last reason is crucial, for, during the Renaissance, art was not art as we understand it today.

For deeper insight into the stories behind the art, follow me on this short historical tour of Florence.
