The Brotherhood of the Red Nile, A Terrorist Perspective Dan Perkins

As the undersecretary of Homeland Security for terrorist activity, Frank Williams meets with the President of the United States Nathan Jordan and members of the Cabinet to tell them the disturbing news. Intelligence has uncovered a new terrorist group more sophisticated and dangerous than al-Qaeda known as the Brotherhood of the Red Nile. The members are not typical terrorists but well educated and in some cases wealth men on a mission.

Their goal is the destruction of America. Half a world away, near the small Syrian town of Al-Mukharram, mastermind terrorist Mohamed el Sargon has two stolen Soviet-era suitcase nuclear bombs in his possession. He puts together a team of experts—a terrorist “think tank”—to plan an unprecedented attack on the United States that may well have a serious impact on America not for days but perhaps generations. He establishes a relationship with the Iranian Nuclear program to update he bombs and makes them more powerful and destructive. Sacrificing their lives for the cause is a small price to pay for the extermination of their enemies.

Intelligence operatives around the world are behind the eight ball and are scrambling to gain information on the brotherhood to try and stop them and protect America. But will they be able to find them and the now more powerful bombs in time?

The offices of the Department of Homeland Security, the White House, to the rebel camps of the Middle East, and intelligence agencies around the world are all part of The Brotherhood of the Red Nile a Terrorist Perspective delivering a chilling, modern-age tale of danger, potential destruction, and heroism.
